1. Between 22 November and 22 December, there was almost no air activity at Peenemuende airfield because of bad weather. Only individual single-engine planes were usually observed. According to an employee at the field, the 18 jet fighters were covered with tarpaulins and parked in the shrapnelproof aircraft revetments. Most of the single-engine planes were parked on the landing field.<sup>1</sup>
2. In November and December, a number of officers of the administrative unit were assigned to the flight personnel. Captain Polokhin (fnu) said that Captain Markov (fnu), Senior Lieutenant Kireyev (fnu) and he himself were transferred to Kolberg. After 20 December, new officers arrived whose names and former assignments could not be determined. Major Zizov (fnu) had not yet returned from leave. Captain Polokhin said that Zizov (fnu) was expected back in early January 1953, but that it was possible that he might have had to remain in Kolberg. In November and December, an unusual large number of officers and EM went on furlough.<sup>2</sup>
3. After 15 December, 13 heavy guns which were covered with tarpaulins and guarded by two sentries were observed in the parking lot. Firing practices had started at the field in early December. A battery, probably located in the yard of the buildings occupied by naval police, fired several shots with raised barrels at unidentified targets.<sup>3</sup>
